“ For as long as I can remember there has been a family Thanksgiving dinner uniting Haineses, Thurmans, sometimes, Englishes, and friends. Adults sat at the main table; children sat at a separate table. Some sat around the house. All trying to be as close together as possible. One year we all congregated at a family home with a big, dining table. As was the custom, after the main dinner, members sectioned off; grown ups hanging out, talking, nibbling...waiting to eat that second helping of turkey dinner. Kids were running around, playing.

Scotty was a toddler during one of these times - dining room table-high, round-bellied, plump cheeks...curly hair. He hung around the table to explore and discover any stray leftover he was free to choose. Unhindered by adult restraint, he spotted a single, stray, green olive. Without hesitation, he popped that thing into his mouth and sucked out every bit of juice - and pimiento - until nothing was left but the shriveled green casing...then he swallowed that right up. No one paid attention to him; everyone was wrapped up in adult conversation or kids' play. Toddler Scotty had this moment of exploration all on his own.

Suddenly, he let out the loudest, most horrific, blood-curdling scream! We thought he was hurt! We thought he was expressing distaste for the olive. No! Scott was expressing pure joy! His mom told us that any time he was pleased with the taste of something, he would scream his satisfaction to the top of his lungs!

Scream on Scotty! Scream with joy!

“ My husband Jimmy (James) Barbour was his coworker and friend. He was Jimmy's favorite to work with!!! He would always say babe, I'm working with Scotty, its going to be a good easy work ride. I remember when Jimmy introduced me to Scotty, I felt his genuineness instantly from the hug. He always had a smile! My husband Jimmy will miss him greatly and I will miss our drive by the house to see if he was home when I visited Louisville. Our condolences to the family, from Jimmy and Bobbie (Barbara) Barbour

“ Scotty, my big brother. I remember growing up back in the 1970s with his family. My mother and his mother were great friends and they were in a social club together. It seemed like every weekend we were over their house at a meeting / function. Where they were tending to business/partying 🕺🕺, while we would be outside playing in the backyard or wherever we could down the block. He was such a great person always had plenty jokes and he was one of the tallest dudes I ever met at that time. Even as we gotten older we didn't get the chance to see each other because we were men handling our own business. However to me, we will always be family and The Sitgraves will always have love for The Thurmans. Rest In Power my brother and one day "When we all get to heaven, what a day of rejoicing that will be." #Algonquin #HaroldAve #Mifamilia 💪💪🏆🏆🙏🙏🕊️🕊️

Scotty was a very friendly and kind person. His eyes would "light up" and a big smile would sweep across his face. It was a pleasure to work with and be around him. I send my most sincere condolences to his family. I know he will be truly missed. From a friend on the Railroad.
