“ Shonda, When our babies were little we changed, fed and comforted them but once in awhile nothing could stop them from crying. When we did all we could, sometimes we just allowed them to cry a little while. Your Gary has been called Home and the pain I know feels unbearable. God will sometimes calm a storm but sometimes, like we did with our children, He will allow the storm to rage while He comforts His child. But unlike us, God never throws up His hands in defeat. His possibilities are endless. As you go through this storm, take the time you need to reflect on your life with Gary. As you begin to move forward, just keep taking one more step. Just do one thing, then the next, and the next. One day the darkness and pain will lift and you will see the beautiful tapestry that God has woven from these steps that He ordered for you. You and the children are loved, and with God all things are possible.
